ESTIMATING THE POPULATION OF HONDURAS, 1821:
Evidence from the Independence Census.

Memphis, Tennessee
January 2022

Introduction

During the first three months of 1821, while politicians were progressing toward Central American Independence, a census was taken in Honduras. The counts were gathered first by populated place, then, compiled by curato and partido (department level). Unfortunately, the known archival manuscripts account for only 40% of the curatos. Therefore, while we will never know the total population and ethnic composition of Honduras at Independence, we can make a gross estimation based on interpolations from previous and later censuses.

A few principles guided the calculations. First, the manuscript censuses of the 19 curatos known for 1821 were accepted without analysis. Second, in an attempt to determine completeness of coverage, a list of populated places, probable for 1821, was generated from the manuscripts of Cadiñanos (1791), Anguiano (1801), Guerra (1803), and Cacho (1834a,b). A few additional locations were added from occasional censuses just before, or after, 1821. The final list included 252 agglomerated settlements and 302 dispersed rural “valles.” Each settlement population was calculated based on earlier and later counts; based on a few regional averages, uncensused valles were assigned a population of 50. Finally, the non-censused regions, the A.O.E.P.C. (area outside effective [national] political control), the territory occupied primarily by unincorporated indigenous populations (primarily Yoro, La Mosquitia), were considered based on the historical record (Davidson 1985; Davidson y Cruz 1995) (see map 1).

The result of the calculations is presented in Table 1 for 8 partidos, 44 curatos, 1 subdelegación, and 1 puerto. For Honduras, in 1821, a population of 153,000 is suggested.

Map 1. Areas of uncensused minority cultures, 1821.

Previous suggestions for total population at 1821 are few. The only firm figures I have seen for 1820-21 are 87,591, by Garcia L. (2005: 490) and 52,087 by Tinoco de Contreras in 1820 (AGI Guatemala 531; Martinez C. 1982: 168-71). In a letter of Aug. 28 Gov. Tinoco “estimated” the population of the province of Honduras to be 25,489 “españoles y mulatos en 47 pueblos, 19 aldeas, 3 villas, y 4 ciudades” and 26,598 “indios repartidos en 78 pueblos.” One mention of the 1821 census mistakes it for the 1834 census of Gracias by Cacho (Menjivar y Zelaya 2003).

Lee Woodward (1987: 178) suggested a figure of 135,000 for 1820, but remarked that “contemporary estimates of populations vary widely and are of doubtful reliability.” He made his projection using a growth rate of 1.3% yearly after 1800. Gudmundsun (1993: 238) and Lindo Fuentes (1993: 150) follow Woodward.

Surprisingly, the Estadístico of Vallejo (1893), which reprints many earlier censuses, does not mention the count of 1821. Newsom (1986), who conducted the most rigorous reconstruction of Honduran population history, carries her analysis only to the “beginning of the nineteenth century.”

Of course, the census counts taken were limited almost entirely to settlements. The dispersed people living in the mountains and difficult to reach rural areas were almost certainly not counted. If they amounted to 10% or so, as suggested by the Anguiano census of the early 1790s, we must add to actual figures reported. Throughout the 19th century commentators have consistently remarked on the “limited confidence” in censuses (Baily 1950: 31) and how there is “no means to discover the number of whites, mestizoes, and Indians” (p. 32). E. G. Squier (1855, 1856: 69) explained that census results were never satisfactory because people fled the “censores” believing they were going to be subjected to military conscription or taxation.

The geopolitical structure of Honduras just before Independence consisted of seven secular “partidos,” divided into “curatos” with their “anexos,” often listed as “valles” or “aldeas.” Previously, recent counts taken primarily to determine the number of tributaries were organized by “curatos” (Cadinaños 1791), “partidos” and “parroquias” (Anguiano 1801) and 33 “curatos” and 120 “feligresias” (BAGG 1806). The constant realignment of political territory within the country certainly added to the confusion associated with the census of 1821 (García Buchard 2021: 155-56; Durón 1904: 67, 109).

| 1777 | 88,965 | including “36,172 indios,” “47,455 ladinos,” and “5,338 españoles.”                         | (Newsom 1986: 325, citing AGI IG 1527)                         |
| 1778 | 88,143 | “feligreses” in 35 “curatos” y 145 “iglesias parroquiales,”                                 | Intendencia de Comayagua. (Juarros 1981: 13; Squier 1855: 40). |
| 1784 | 84,914 | “feligreses” in 139 settlements, including Comayagua with 5,006 and Tegucigalpa with 7,148. | (Bozzoli 1971: 83, citing Gómez C. 1905: 266-7).               |
| 1786 | 65,008 | adults only                                                                                 | (Newsom 1985: 24, citing AGI Guatemala 777)                    |

1791 93,501/96,421 340 populated places; 35 curatos (Cadiñanos 1791)

1800 92,330 (López V. 1971: 345, without citation)

1800 62,692 (Newsom 1986: 330)

1801 128,863 259 settlements (Anguiano 1804)

1801 35,571 + (Guerra 1803)

“Comayagua. Mapas de tributaries deducidas de la numeracion executada de Marzo de 1801 a Enero de 802. Nueva Guatemala, febrero 8 de 803, Ygnacio Guerra.” (AGCA A3.16/244-4871); LDS 744866/8146492 249 folios.

Guerra produced a detailed census of 109 settlements during 1801 with the intent of determining the number of tributarios. For each place he recorded nine categories of residents: “casados and solteros (who comprised the tributaries), plus ausentes, proximos, ninos, reservados, viudos, solteras, and laborios.” As an example, Comayaguela, which finished its count on June 21, 1801, had 134 casados, 136 soltreros [therefore 270 tributarios], 45 ausentes, 78 proximoas, 229 niños, 87 viudos, 264 solteras, and no laborios. The total population was 1,028.

1804 [65.140] ? An incomplete count of 13,028 “familias de españoles y ladinos” found in “pueblos de indios” (2,095 fams.), in “villas o reducciones” (7,449 fams.), and in “valles y haciendas” (3,484 fams.). Trujillo, Omoa, and La Mosquitia are lacking. Using an average family size of five people, the Intendencia de Comayagua would have had 65,140 inhabitants. (AGCA 2646-22150; LDS 747059, image 222)

1805 93,501 (after Cadiñanos 1791); bishop Peñalver (Villacorta C. 1942: 367)

1810 99,501 the figure suggested by Antonio Larrazábal while on his trip to Cadiz. (García L. 2005 : 491)

1815 Tegucigalpa only (Vallejo 1893: 19)

1816 100,000 estimate (Tornos 1815-16)

1818 135,279 After 22 years in Comayagua, Anguiano wrote a manuscript “Descripción . . . de Honduras . . .” that includes his last estimate of population. He found 135,279 inhabitants, comprised of 94,428 “españoles, ladinos, negros franceses, ingles, y caribes that are on the coast of Honduras,” 35,451 “indios in 118 towns that contain 7,190 tributarios,” and 5,400 “sambos y mosquitos.” (Anguiano 1818)

1820 135,000 est. (Woodward 1987:1780)

Woodward made his estimate realizing the “contemporary estimates of the populations vary widely and are of doubtful reliability.” He made his projection using a growth rate of 1.3% yearly after 1800. Gudmundsun (1993: 238) and Lindo Fuentes (1993: 150) follow Woodward.

1820 52,087 (Tinoco de Contreras 1820 AGI Guatemala 531; Martinez C. 1982: 168-71)

In a letter of Aug. 28 (AGI Guat 531) Gov. José Gregorio Tinoco “estimated” the population of the province of Honduras to be 25,489 “españoles y mulatos en 47 pueblos, 19 aldeas, 3 villas, y 4 ciudades” and 26,598 “indios repartidos en 78 pueblos.”

1821 87,591 The census of 1821 was ordered from Tegucigalpa on January 3rd (Garcia L. 2005: 490; ANH Col. 6024).

1825 [173,365] (“21,165 españoles,” “106,668 ladinos,” and “45,532 indios.”) (García P. 1944: 167-8)

1825 137,069 “población de las provincias, Provincia de Comayagua” (AGCA B84.3.1/1130-25974; LDS 4485042 59/429 printed). A census to determine taxation was ordered in 1823 (AGCA B84.3.1/1130-25974; LDS 4485042); organized in 1824 (1130-25975); and occurred in late 1824 (1130-25977).

1830 152,000 est. (Woodward 1987:1780)

1834 Worthy of mention is the detailed census of western Honduras by the jefe politico of Gracias, José María Cacho, in 1832-4. This was first micro-geography of a portion of Honduras, and included Ocotepeque, Copán, Lempira, and Intibucá. Within were 10 districts, 30 municipios, and 90 settlements. His counts, which were at the settlement level, total 30,015, including 17,279 ladinos and 12,736 indios (Cacho 1834a, b).

1838 173,365 45,532 (26.3%)” indios” (García Pelaez 1944: III, 165)

1840 178,000 estimate (Woodward 1987:1780)

Comayagua vs. Tegucigalpa, 1821.

Population estimates for the largest Honduran cities around the time of Independence have ranged wildly. Long after the period scholars without access to the 1821 census made their guesses: Comayagua in 1821 had between 6-8,000 (Parker 1964: 57-8, cited by Bozzoli de Wille 1971: 83) or 7,000-9,999 (Bozzoli de Wille 1971: 96). Tegucigalpa had 4-6,000, or about 7,000 (Villacorta 1942: 97-8, 110-11; Bozzoli de Wille 1971: 100).

Writers for the era had more specific figures for the two cities, supposedly based on census information. Tegucigalpa has much better coverage, especially for 1821 since the census is preserved in great detail (BBAT 1821 ms.).

For 1784, Gómez Carrillo (1905: 266-67, cited by Bozzoli de Wille 1971: 83) claimed very specific figures: Comayagua had 5,006 residents and Tegucigalpa 7,148.

For 1791, Bishop Fernando Cadiñanos' "Estado general que Manifiesta . . ." listed populations only at the curato level: Comayagua, including Caridad had 10,530 residents (AGI Indiferente General 1525, no. 11; also Vallejo (1893: 105-18). Curato Tegucigalpa had 5,431.

For 1793 The census ordered by Guatemala leader Bernardo Troncoso Martínez del Rincón (AGI Guatemala 476; Martínez Castillo 1982: 155) reported 7,000 people in Tegucigalpa and 7,152 in Comayagua.

1796 The manuscript padrón that provided data for Anguiano's final count was held in the ecclesiastical archive in Comayagua and is available on-line via the Church of the Latter Day Saints' collection (AEC doc /LDS1645760). At the time Comayagua was home to 3,207 residents. See Table 3 below.

1801 The Anguiano census calculated Comayagua's population at 3,586, but that figure is flawed because all families counted were simply multiplied by six for a final settlement count. Of course, family size varied throughout the country. Based on the detailed census of the Trujillo area in 1821, Sonaguera had 4.7 people per family, Spanish families in Trujillo averaged 5.0 people per family; and the largest Garifuna settlements had 3.98 and 3.7 per family. In other words, in all instances, the Anguiano census curato population estimates, which were all calculated at 6 people per family in Spanish and ladino households, were too high by 20 to 50 percent. Tegucigalpa, according to Anguiano, would have 4,071 residents, without 1,143 more including Comayaguela and Río Abajo.

1805 According to Durón (1904: 150), a census of 1805 placed 6,000+ "almas" in the Tegucigalpa curato.

In 1815, according to Vallejo (1892: 19), "Tegucigalpa y sus barrios" had 2,687 habitantes living in 525 dwellings. Nearby Comayaguela counted 1,599, Pueblo Abajo 73, and Río Abajo 531. The entire curato population was 8,071. Durón (1904: 150) reported 8,070.

In 1820 the "Informe de . . . Coronel José Gregorio Tinoco de Contreras (AGI Guatemala 531; Martínez C. 1982: 33) found 6,547 almas in Tegucigalpa. This number undoubtedly included habitants of Comayaguela also.

1821 In spite of the detailed census taken in 1821, Durón (1904:150) claims that the Tegucigalpa curato had 11,000 residents, of which 8,000 lived in the "villa."

The determination of Comayagua's population at 1821 is a much more difficult matter. Unlike Tegucigalpa, Comayagua has no known manuscript census for the year. Perhaps the best aid to interpolating the population is the detailed census of March 31, 1796 (AEC, LDS 1645760). It is a barrio-by-barrio counting of all houses and souls in Comayagua, plus adjacent centers of Geto (Jeto) and Barrio Caridad. Adding to that population (3,207) at 1.3% annual growth rate (Woodward 1987) will equal 4,429; at 1.5% annual growth rate the population of Comayagua reaches 4,653. Under either case, the capital's population exceeded that of Tegucigalpa and was roughly equal to the Tegucigalpa-Comayaguela urban complex (4,500).

León Alvarado (1856: 152, note 150), in his translation of E. G. Squier's Notes on Central America, particularly Honduras and San Salvador (1855), thought Comayagua had 17-18,000 residents in 1821.
